

Diabetes in Louisiana: costs, new technologies and better quality of life

Every day, 30 million Americans struggle with diabetes. For those that are diagnosed, the disease directly impacts many of the decisions they make, and daily activities are often interrupted by finger sticks, insulin injections, dietary changes, fatigue, the threat of hypoglycemia and other disease concerns.

Every day – like clockwork – young and old individuals with diabetes prick, monitor and then work to sustain a good quality of health while fighting the constant fears that come as a result of living with a chronic illness.
